Neoclassical Architecture in Greece: Lessons to be Applied to Modern Cities and their Architecture

Michael Lykoudis is an architect and professor at the University of Notre Dame, who grew up in West Lafayette Indiana, but spent almost all of his summers in Athens. The speaker will offer a brief history of the new (1800s) city of Athens and the neoclassical buildings that gave Greece a new national identity. He will further discuss how the experiences of growing up on both sides of the Atlantic gave him a perspective on what is essential in making cities and buildings of today.
